BOK CEO Addresses Employee Questions

Last week, almost three-quarters of CoBiz employees took part in meetings with BOK Financial President and CEO Steve Bradshaw and CoBiz Chairman and CEO Steve Bangert. Whether you missed the meetings or you're just trying to stay current with the latest updates, we've captured some of the most frequently asked questions from the sessions. We will continue to share updates and update the information on the Bunkhouse as we get more details. Keep reading to learn more.

Q: Engagement with the community is really important at CoBiz. Can you tell us how BOK Financial engages with the communities it serves?

A: Community engagement is really important to us, and is focused in the areas of basic needs, economic development, education, and the United Way. The BOK Foundation contributed $5.1 million last year and community engagement is viewed as something we want to do and should do, not something we have to do. I know that community support is at the core of CoBiz, and I want to learn more about the Biz Bash and everything else that you do.

Q: Can you share more about the credit approval process at BOK Financial? Do you use credit officers, loan committee, pods?

A: Yes, yes and yes. We have loan committee for deals at $35 million and above, senior credit officers embedded in most markets, and regional underwriting centers that work on smaller business and private banking loans. We have a very disciplined approach to credit, which is reflected in the fact that we have above median growth but credit quality that is at or near the top of our peer group. We expect our credit team to do the work and find a path to yes, although we can't always do that.

Q: Obviously, BOK Financial is very comfortable with non-banking business lines. Can you address whether insurance will be part of the offering going forward?

A: With more than 40% our revenues derived from non-interest income, we are obviously very comfortable with fee businesses. Our wealth management business represents 11 different businesses comprising $82 billion in assets under management. We don't currently offer P&C insurance, but we do have employee benefits. In fact, our 401(k) area manages more than 1,000 plans. We are eager to dig in and learn more about insurance, including the synergies with the commercial bank, growth factors and staffing.

Q: Most of BOK Financial's growth has been organic; do you anticipate doing more acquisitions after this or returning the focus to organic growth?

A: With almost $4 billion in assets, CoBiz nearly equals all of our previous acquisitions added together. Our most recent acquisition was a bank in Kansas City in 2016. It was our first bank acquisition since 2007, and it was good to "get the band together" to review our integration process. Our preference is for organic growth. Investment bankers send us packets on potential acquisitions all the time, but we pass on most of them. That said, competing up market may require scale and regulatory changes allow us to think beyond the previous $50 billion threshold.

Q: Which business lines will be fueling growth for BOK in the future?

A: Certainly wealth management and healthcare with the aging boomer population. Core C&I lending is a tough, competitive space for all of us but we believe that there will be fewer players across the country, which is an opportunity for us. That said, no business line is off the hook, and I expect growth from everyone.

Q: Have there been any considerations about the bank name going forward?

A: Our banks are under one charter and have historically operated as separately named DBAs in each state. However, we increasingly compete on national scope business, and we don't want to appear small in those conversations. We are considering a unified brand, particularly for our western markets. We should know more in about 30 days, but I would anticipate that a regional brand could mean a new name for all affected banks going forward.

Q: Will there be opportunities for companywide support functions outside of Tulsa?

A: Today, the majority of companywide support functions operate in Tulsa and Oklahoma City, with a few positions embedded in different regions. As we consolidate this acquisition, we may need to assess the need for incremental support.

Q: What are the next steps on integration?

A: We have identified the individuals at BOK who will lead the integration team and who will be in Colorado next week. We will begin work immediately, but regulatory requirements dictate that we don't get involved in running your business until after the transaction closes. We will be very transparent in our communication, sharing information as it becomes available. There is a huge risk in not managing this transition well. The moment this transaction was announced, our competitors were circling around our clients. We need to make sure we're all focused on taking care of our clients and on having a successful integration.
